

Person-Centered Job Selection

at a glance

Who?

The employment specialist spends time with the person and those who know them well to develop an understanding of the person and their capabilities.

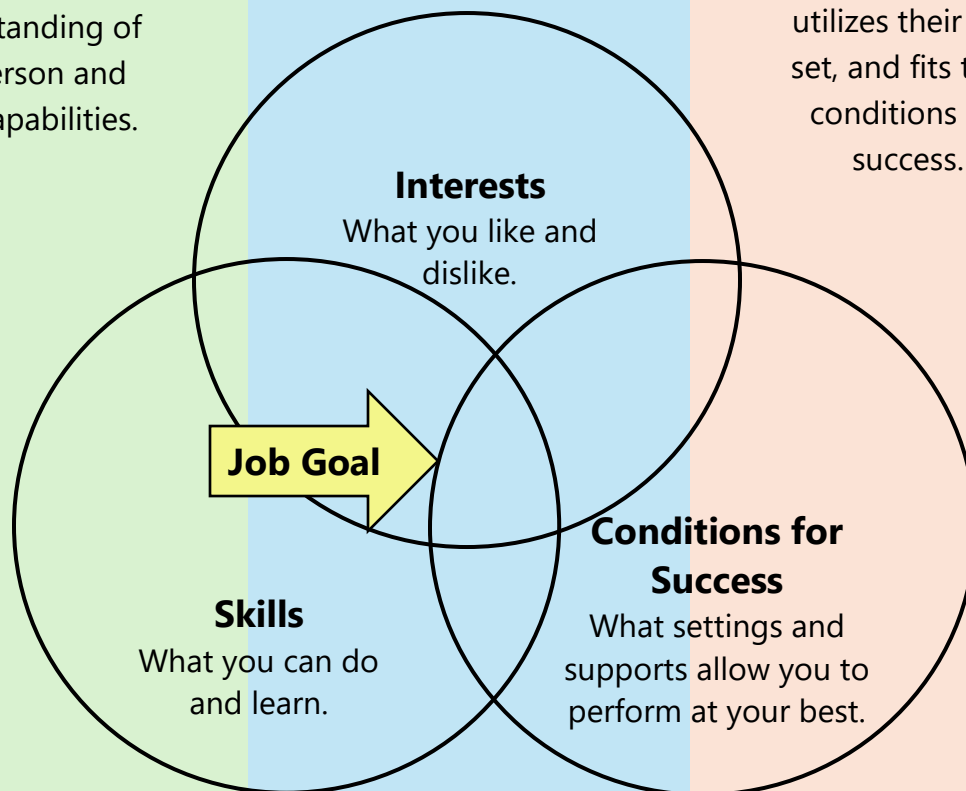

What?

We need to learn the person's interests, skills, and what success would look like for them.

Why?

This process creates a plan to guide job development that includes the person's interests, utilizes their skill set, and fits their conditions for success.

Person-Centered Job Selection is one phase of supported employment services in Kentucky funded by both the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Cabinet for Health and Family Services.
